

From BOOK –Chapter 2	From BRAIN – Nov 11
Pg 11 "When his family received Lily"	Sounds unusual but wouldn't really be different than adoption except that someone else decides when you receive a child and everyone is adopted"
Pg 11 "Each December, all the newchildren born in the previous year turned One."	I like the term newchildren better than baby because it's more precise. I assume that after the Ceremony of Ones they are no longer newchildren. We all use baby for different amounts of time. 'm still the baby of our family, I guess. So everyone has the same birthday even though they were born at different times. I'm trying to think of the advantages of that. It would make a real difference when the children are young, but not so much as they age. I think of my students as eighth-graders, not 13, 14, or 15 year olds so it's the same thing.
